

In the design of my website I plan to reach my target audience but do it in a usual way . The purpose for my site is to put all the work I do in AIT 2. My home page is going to have nothing to do with my AIT work, the about me section will have a fictional character and a bio about him, and the a.c.p page is going to hold all the work for this year in AIT. The target audience for my site will be my teacher, other people in my AIT course and family members and other teachers if my work goes to moderation.

For my home page, I will have my banner at the top of the page, underneath that will be the navigation page, below the navigation will be my content for the home page then at the very bottom will be the footer. My banner is set out in the way of barcode font with AIT 2 and my number. Then next to that is my name "David Bourne" in a different font and in the far right corner is a picture of volume and tone controls on a guitar, which fades in to the background of the banner. The background of the banner is black and the text is all in purple. The navigation has three sections in it, there is a home page, an about me and an a.c.p page. The home page will have the banner and navigation the same as all pages then in the middle I will have an old style scroll witch I can hopefully put a poem in it. The background will be black and the scroll will be white but I am going to try putting a purple fade on the edge. The about me page will have the banner and navigation sections as all pages do. Then in the left corner will be a photo of my fictional character then to the middle or right side I will have a brief introduction of my person. Then in the next paragraph I will have more about my person. On the a.c.p page I will have the banner and navigation and under neither that will be a page with all my PDF links to all my school work for AIT.
